Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Pilgrims to the Isles of Penance: Orchid Gathering in the East Monet, the great French impressionist, painted a series of fifteen pictures, the subject of each of which was two haystacks. Each time he portrayed them in a different light, showing them in the dawn, the day, the evening and the mist. I have felt that, were I an artist, I too would like to paint one scene in many different ways, delineating the view as I should imagine that a child would see it, a girl, a yoke], an artist, a woman from Mayfair, and a man from one of those fearful parts of a great city where vice appears unveiled and poverty has not wherewithal to cover her nakedness. TO one the landscape would seem a fairy tale, to another merely dull, to a third a wilderness, to a fourth the ordinary, well-observed setting of daily life. My idea is that in art and, of course, in literature a true presentation of anything at all into which individuality is carried must be interesting. There should be an autobiography written typical of every class and caste: even the life histories of crossing sweepers or cowmen would be of interest, were they true - true, that is, to those things which lie beneath the surface in every man - and recounted with an insight that would plumb the wells of experience and of feeling.
