Excerpt from The Relation of the Civil Government to Christian Missions: The Ramsden Sermon for 1902 Preached Before the University of Cambridge on Whit Sunday May 18, 1902 I desire to handle in this sermon a subject which as much as any I know in the range of Mission problems needs prayer for a right judgment in all things, in the words of our whit-sunday Collect - I refer to the relation of the Civil Government to Mission enterprise. I do not propose to hold a brief either for the missionary or for the statesman, for no one can fail to see that each has a duty and a responsibility: they are not identical, and yet I venture to believe they may never be antagonistic. It is to be hoped they will be parallel influences, each giving due weight to the judgment of the other. The utmost extent of my aspiration is that I may bring the conviction home to some that the subject begets a becoming humility both in the missionary and in the civil ruler. Now it is obvious from the verses I have read you that it is a cardinal principle of the Faith of Christ that His kingdom is to grow by influence not by force, that it is leaven and not a sword. The Lord chose the long way, not the short one, when He willed to claim the heart and not merely the outward allegiance, and so accepted the conclusion that whole races should die in darkness, rather than His people should use physical force thereby at the same time creating some mysteries which can only be solved in a future life.
