Not illustrated. 1895 Excerpt: . suggestions as to the relative condensation of a molecule in comparison with others of similar empirical composition. For instance, leucite and jadeite are empirically of similar type; but the latter has by far the greater density, together with superior hardness. It is, therefore, presumably more complex than leucite, and this supposition must be taken into account in considering its ultimate formula. From what may be called the natural history of a mineral, still another group of data can be drawn, relating to its genesis, its constant associations, and its alterability. In this connection pseudomorphs become of the utmost interest, and, properly studied, shed much light upon otherwise obscure problems. An alteration product is the record of a chemical change, and as such has weighty significance. The decomposition of spodumene into eucryptite and albite, the transformation of topaz into mica, and many like occurrences in nature, are full of meaning with reference to the problem now under consideration. Just here, however, great caution is necessary. Mineralogical literature is full of faulty records regarding alterations, and many diagnoses need to be revised. Pseudomorphs have been named by guesses, based upon their external appearance, and often a compact mica has been called steatite or serpentine. In every case an alteration product should be identified with extreme care, both by chemical and by microscopical methods; for without such precautions there is serious danger of error. In each instance the supposed fact must be scrupulously verified. Closely allied to the...
